ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Motion compensation of real-time video for transmission over a packetized network is controlled by maximization of the probability of correct frame reconstruction according to a Markov model of packet transmission losses. The control determines a tradeoff of the intra-coded frame rate with a repeated predictively-coded frame rate.